- 09:33:56 From Jonny Whitehead : For me, one of the big challenges at the moment is how to Manage By Walking About in a remote working world: how to 'pop by' without freaking people out by appearing on their screen!
- 09:33:57 From Susie Corfield : One of the things that is hardest about working remotely is the loss of opportunity to MBWA
- 09:34:04 From Susie Corfield : haha snap Jonny!
- 09:35:02 From Sam Alford : Yeah, we've become much more routinized - scheduled virtual coffees etc but not the same!

- 09:36:06 From Katie Mantell : I agree - it is really hard to do this effectively in our new way of working. Some things we have tried are virtual 'fikas' open to all etc, but there is understandable zoom fatigue...
- 09:37:41 From Miranda Beebe : We do a weekly all staff call which takes a different structure each week - one is a staff interview and then virtual coffee with a different group each time, another focuses on getting updates from a specific team.. It's not perfect but has helped a bit, especially as we've got so many new people coming in.
- 09:42:06 From Geraldine Costello : Brene Brown is amazing
- 09:42:44 From Nic Shoultz : We have fortnightly 'week recaps' where we meet with drinks informally at about 16:30. This also ensures people log off at a reasonable time. Also, using Microsoft teams instant chat function to have more informal chats. We are also doing monthly all staff events with a purpose - this month being Black History Month and next month we are doing a Diwali Party
- 09:44:55 From Jonny Whitehead : I agree with 'step back, not step in'. I guess though that one of the challenges many of us have in the charity sector is that we probably don't have the spare resources (people, time or money) to be able to afford to get things wrong.
- 09:45:46 From Tim Lages : Can you afford to get things right in the "wrong" way though?
- 09:46:20 From Tim Lages : (sorry to ask a question that's easy to ask but hard to actually do!)
- 09:46:25 From Jonny Whitehead : :-)
- 10:07:48 From Sam Alford : Trust and feeling like you are trusted and someone has your back!
- 10:12:49 From Tim Lages : Hello fellow Bristol person!
